Note from Rohina Malik

I wrote Unveiled because I was tired of the negative images of my community that I saw on television, theater and film. The more I studied hate crime, the more I realized that a hate crime never begins with a weapon. A hate crime begins with an atmosphere where negative stereotypes about a group of people, and degrading language, are allowed to exist and grow. I knew that my way to combat hate towards my community was to face the negative stereotypes and challenge them. For the last decade, I have been performing Unveiled all over the country. I have experienced firsthand the power of art. I will never forget a young man who saw the play and was crying. He told me he hated Muslims and that he thought Muslim women wore a veil to celebrate 9/11. He said "I didn't realize you wore it for God. I was ignorant. And I'm sorry." It was such a powerful moment for me as an artist. The film version of Unveiled is a result of the Pandemic. I hope the film reaches a much larger audience. I'm grateful to New Rep for hosting the film. And I want to thank New Rep patrons for supporting my work.

Sincerely,

Rohina Malik

New Rep's Indigenous People's Land Recognition

By Dr. Mishy Lesser and Michael J. Bobbitt

All teaching, learning, and performing take place on Indigenous Lands. We are coming to you from a place originally called Pigsgusset, which means Meadows At The Widening Of The River. Now referred to as Watertown, this land is the traditional and ancestral homeland of the Pequotsette Band of the Massachusetts People and their neighbors, the Nipmuc and Wampanoag Nations. While Pigsgusset is likely an inaccurate spelling of the original name, rendered according to English colonial settlers, and we do not know its pronunciation according to the First Peoples of the land, we make this acknowledgement to offer recognition and respect to the original inhabitants of this place and their descendants today, especially because the Indigenous history of Watertown has been erased for the last four hundred years. New Repertory Theatre commits to supporting Indigenous peoples and their cultures by hiring and supporting artists who are Indigenous and want to tell their own stories.

Learn more about Land Acknowledgements here:

You're unique. Come play with us.

New Rep's Anti-Racism/Diversity Statement

New Repertory Theatre will create internal organizational systems, processes, structures and cultures that encourage any person to engage with us. In creating an equitable culture, we actively seek diversity, inclusivity and accessibility because we want the stories of all people to be reflected in the stories we tell in our productions.
